May's Featured Artist Mary Norvell

Featured artist of May, Mary Norvell, had a fantastic display of watercolors. Her watercolors are frequently based on cemetery angels. She also displayed some wonderful sculptures that represent another part of her work. Check out the Bonus Content to see more of her unique work.

No stick figures here...well, maybe a couple!

There were some crazy drawings at the May membership meeting. The pressure was on for our great AFAF artists playing Pictionary. Extra creativity was needed while under time constraints, to illustrate a picture from a randomly picked word or phrase so that their team would guess the correct answer. Lots of laughs!

The Artful Pen

Short Creative Writings

Vanity by Jeff Harold

I ran to the east to catch the rising sun,
To hold it and proclaim it mine,
And at noon I raised my arms in support
As if the sun needed my flicker to shine.

And the sun continued on its' path
As to the west I chased my glory,
Finally, I laid watching the night,
The shooting star having told its' story.

Ask Arty...

Dear Arty,

I often see notices for “en plein air” painting opportunities and I was wondering how outdoor painting got to be a “thing” for artists. Can you give me some background on how this got started and why it's any better than painting in a studio?

Thanks, Stephanie

Dear Stephanie,

First the reason why. If an artist makes a landscape painting in the studio using his imagination or perhaps a sketch that he made outdoors, he loses the feeling of the scene that is created by the light at the time that he is painting the scene. The best way to capture the true effect of the light is to paint while you're there in the moment. This fact was recognized as early as the late 18th century and early 19th century by the group of artist known as the “Romantics” (John Constable and William Turner are a couple of examples). Their search for authenticity placed a high value on sketching directly from nature. Most of their work was still completed in the studio mainly due to the difficulty of transporting the tools they had to work with.

Two “technology” developments and one art movement in the mid 19th century made “en plein air” painting very practical. The first tech development was that paint was no longer stored in pig's bladder. The method of creating a tin tube of paint with a screw on cap make it possible to safely carry your paint and save what you didn't use for another day. The second tech development was the manufacturing of a portable easel. Along with these developments you had the Impressionist movement that stressed painting outdoors to capture the true feel of the light on the landscape.

A third tech development was absolutely critical to the Impressionist movement. This was the addition of the ferrule to the paintbrush. This is the metal on the paint brush that holds the bristles together. Up until the ferrule, the bristles were glued or tied to the end of a stick. This limited the brush shape. The ferrule allowed for the creation of flat brushes which made the Impressionist style of painting possible.

Hope this helps.

Best, Arty
